The George has a long and colourful history and has been welcoming visitors for over 300 years. The George of the eighteenth century was a coaching inn with coaches driving through the archway in the centre to reach the inn-yard behind.

Over the archway there was a balcony which was used at election times for candidates to address people gathered in the streets below. The George was always associated with the Whig faction whilst The Swan opposite was staunchly Tory.

The proprietor between 1800 and 1820 was one Thomas Webb; one of the largest horse-keepers in the Midlands. He supplied horses not only for the coaches and post-chaises running from The George, but also around the city.
